PLAYING WITH SUGAR

In 1872, Henry Tate the successful owner of Henry Tate & Sons sugar refinery purchased the patent from German Eugen Langen on a method of making sugar cubes.

The show Playing with Sugar takes its name from the fact that Streatham Public Library, which opened in 1890, was founded through the generosity of Henry Tate. Tate lived in Streatham and gave generously but discreetly to many local and national charitable causes, including £5,000 for the building of the free public library in Streatham.

Following an extensive programme of refurbishment the Tate Library and adjacent Tudor Hall in Streatham will be reopened in March 2014 as the Streatham Tate Library and Streatham Tate Centre. Performances of Playing with Sugar and the associated exhibition of local memories will be part of the programme of opening celebrations.
